CONFERENCE OVERVIEW

The Humphries Symposium is dedicated to providing the clinical ophthalmologist with opportunities to increase knowledge and competence related to the most up-to-date diagnostic and therapeutic interventions and to reflect on how this information might lead to changes in their daily practice. Each year we try to rotate a topic. This year we are emphasizing cornea. There has been a rapid change in cornea including the advent on endothelial keratoplasty. We will review some of these topics as well as highlighting changes in our approach to keratoconus and corneal problems associated with rosacea. Additional talks will also highlight current challenges and potential advances in the treatment of corneal disease.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Upon completion of the Symposium, participants will be able to:

- review the historical treatments of keratoconus
- summarize current state-of-the-art surgical management of keratoconus
- review the spectrum of salient signs and symptoms in rosacea
- review current management programs for rosacea
